Snow Blindness-Malingering - Burden of Proof.

The claimant was discharged from the military service on two occasions on account of impairment of vision ascribed to snow blindness. His claim for pension was filed shortly after his first discharge.

Medical authorities show that snow blindness is rarely more than a temporary affection, and that in the excepopacity of the cornea or disease of the Cemetery was also included. retina to account for the affliction. In this case the transcripts from official Adams says: "One must go there to records and reports of official examinations failed to reveal any evidence sainted martyrs now sing in loud hoof either corneal opacity or disease of the retina, and it is quite clear that the alleged impairment of vision has been feigned—to a great extent, if not wholly. The fact that the claimant passed the physical examination for reenlistment clearly sustains the assumption that he was a malingerer in connection with his claim for pension.

The burden of proof in establishing a prima-facie case for pension rests upon the claimant, and when malingering has been open and persistent, as in this case, the claimant must furnish design is sketched here. The coat hangs satisfactory evidence to warrant further action. 83. 2-6-'06.
